CHARITABLE PURPOSE

Annual Report Module 1, 1.22, charitable purpose.

In many professional bodies, intellectual property such as technical guidance has been created by volunteers. However, others have contracted this out to corporate entities and it is not always clear how the work was awarded or the fees paid for it.

In some professional bodies, the intellectual property is owned by a limited company, not the charity per se, albeit part of the charity group. This opens up the possibility of charitable, volunteer-created Intellectual Property being sold off, along with the company.

SUGGESTION: Where a charity's objects rely on donated intellectual property for the benefit of society, the Annual Report should explain, either in the charitable benefit or volunteers section:

1. What proportion of the charity's Intellectual Property is created by volunteer donations to the charity, versus bought-in Intellectual Property for commercial research/authoring fees, explaining any discounts.
2. Comment on long-term plans and the sustainability of buying-in Intellectual Property.
3. The benefits to society of collaborations, such as Intellectual Property jointly-owned or paywall-accessed by both a charity and a commercial entity.
4. Disclose the tendering process for bought-in commercial research/authoring.
5. Explain whether the charity holds exclusivity, or any commercial expectations of bought in Intellectual Property, such as influence over the charity's strategy.
6. Comment on how the charity's strategy for creating or buying-in Intellectual Property differs from a trade association, which often does much the same thing.

VOLUNTEERS

Some Annual Reports and annual meetings have made only passing reference to volunteers, perhaps because of a perception that they are “members” or “customers”, indistinct. Moreover, in one case it remained unclear for some time what insurance cover the charity provided for volunteers (other than the trustees’ indemnity insurance). The insurance also needs to be appropriate to the activities undertaken by volunteers, for example visits to sites away from a shop, venue, or office environment

SUGGESTION With that in mind, the Volunteers section should require the charity to state clearly whether volunteers are fully-integrated with staff, and afforded the same insurance cover appropriate to volunteer roles and activities, just as the staff would be.
